Session Schedule

Love is not enough. We've all heard this as we prepare to parent a BIPOC child, but what does that really mean? Parenting children who will face racism, discrimination and "othering" requires parents to develop a certain set of skills and awareness. This series is designed to be part of that process.

This five-part series is designed to:

- Educate you on social justice and allyship
- Guide you through owning your role and responsibility as the future parent of a BIPOC child,
- Discuss how to show up as an anti-racist advocate in your life, family, and community,
- Provide insight on how to shape your future child's life and community as one that is anti-racist and inclusive, and
- Have conversations with your child, family, and community about social justice, human rights and the history of adoption in your life, family, and community.
